Dame Barbara Jean Petit

Dame Barbara Jean Petit's long battle with ovarian cancer ended on October 23, 2015. She was the sun in a solar system that included hundreds of relatives and friends who spent many happy hours enjoying her skills as a chef, hostess, and entertainer.

She was a longtime member of the Atlanta Chapter of Les Dames d'Escoffier International. Barbara was known for her love of the holidays. Following her Christmas dinners and under her direction, the night would end with everyone gathering in the living room to drink wine and sing Christmas carols.

Barbara's love for her friends, her relatives, and her life was something miraculous. She always shared the things she loved, whether a trip to Ireland or France, a wonderful champagne or wine that she and her husband kept in their wine cellar, or a spectacular cheese that she had discovered. She, her husband, CJ, and their daughter, Caroline, were the ultimate hosts, never caring if their guests were people they had known for years or people they had just met.

Eventually, her love of food and her nurturing soul led to a desire to make sure all Georgians could get access to fresh, sustainable food. Her work as president of the board of Georgia Organics was a natural blending of all her strengths: providing for others and surrounding all with beautiful, fresh food.

Her commitment to that ideal never wavered and continues to live on in her name, with the Barbara Petit Pollinator Award, given annually by Georgia Organics to the person who most embodies that commitment to sustainable farming and the availability of good, local food.
